

“A problem shared is a problem halved—A joy shared is a joy doubled.”—German Proverb

To the degree frustration and sense of hopelessness can be amplified, so can empowerment the louder we are willing to get when things go well or when they do not. So many of us are conditioned to think about our story, our circumstances, (positive or negative) as ours and ours alone. It is part of the arsenal the alienator uses to keep us feeling small and powerless. They count on the targeted parent to feel like it's not worth it, to give up.

There are also some who believe that their story is only of concern to them and the immediate people around them.

But our struggles and our successes can be of enormous value to others in similar situations when we share more broadly, especially when dealing with those groups or institutions (legal and mental health) that enable the alienator to do what he or she does.

To the degree frustration and sense of hopelessness can be amplified, so can empowerment the louder we are willing to get when things go well (meaning the best interests of our children are acted upon) or when things do not (when, due to ignorance or simply a desire to go with the path of least resistance to the detriment, of the children instead).

I have been working to get a directory of competent professionals who are properly trained and equipped to help those who need competent help in dealing with what is happening to their children and to them.

CONTACT US WITH INFORMATION ABOUT ATTORNEYS AND MENTAL HEALTH PROFESSIONALS WHO CAUSED HARM

On the flip side, if you have had the misfortune of dealing with professionals who have been incompetent or have been enabling alienators to separate children from parents who are able to love and care for them, please help alert other families who may be walking into the same potential trap. By applying pressure, the goal is to make it more difficult to do the wrong thing and easier to do the right thing.

Any practice you send should contain what happened, without slamming or name-calling, but rather providing a factual account of what happened. See the latest submitted example here. Remember, we want to educate and change, not just punish. We also want to stay focused on the facts to avoid grounds for legal action being taken, something that is very difficult if not impossible to do when recounting things that actually happened.
