

While I get the unified pain and the passion for addressing a parent poisoning their child or children against the other, I encourage anyone learning more about this to check out this post from Dr. Childress. It is very important to get the differences in this approach. We've had over 30 years of this "syndrome" approach and it has done little more than create a false "controversy" and trying to say something that is already identifiable and observable is something new.

See the blog post here:

PAS is a Bad Model for a Pathology